A FAMOUS BRIGAND. -The brigand of whom I wrte in a late letter has been captured .-Originally there were two brigands, and as they were well munted they were not a little terror in the neighborhood they visited. But one of them was taken about a fortnight ago, and although it was known that the stronger of the two yet remained to be taken, it was easily to be imagined that it would not be long before he would be captured. Whilst there were two, one could watch over the other and help him in case of need when he went to fetch the food and other necessaries which they had deposited at various places for them; but, left alone, Tiburei had to have recourse to a confidant to bring him his food, and it was this confident who sold him. Five carabiniers lay in ambush near the spot where his food was concealed, and whilst the brigand was proceeding to take ir, the nearest carabinier fell upon him and held him firmly notil the others came to the spot. They bound his arms to his sides. Before that the unfortunate man had tried all means to free himself, or to turn his gun on the carabinier who held him, but it was impossible. When he passed through Bracciano all the town turned out to look at him; for it was around Bracciano that he committed the worst ravages, because many rich Roman princes and others have villas and castles there, and he could get greater booty from them than from poorer people There are also some very pretty bathing pieces around Bracciano, and mineral water springs much resorted to, which were all founts of profit to the brigands, for as yet there is no railroad to any of these places. Bracciano, consequently, was more interested than any other part in the brigand's capture. Those who saw him say he is a strikingly handsome man. and hat, bound as he was, he caused fear to those who looked at him on account of the wonerful fire of his eyes. He is not much over 40 years of age. He had been around Bracciano for the last seven years, and had committed more than one murder during those years. In any case, the Roman province is well rid of the fellow, however much he may be admired by the ladies. I hear that more than one lady has written to him to express sympathy. It is strange, but it is equally true, that these brigands excite great sympathy in the female mind. When Leoni was taken some years ago a vast carrespondence of love letters was found upon correspondence of love letters was found upon rim. Russian and English ladies espeially were most generous in their condolences. Tiburs also may, perhaps have his share of love espistles when his trial begins. As yet, however, the brigand is sulky and will not eat anything.— Rome Cor. of the Phila N. Am

A GOOD YEAR FOR SNAKES. - There resides at Basket Station, Pa., a celebrated hunter, trapper and snake tamer by the name of John Geer. He is married and has a family of children. Daring the winter months Geer earns a living for his family by hunting birds and trapping foxes, bears and other animals, for which the region is noted. His summers are spent in estebiog rattlesnakes, which are very numerous in the mountains around Basket, Geer knows where there are several rattlescake dens, and he frequently visits them with as much unconcern as though he were going on a whortleverry expedition. He has a dog that usually accompanies him to the mountains when on a rattlesnake hunt, which, by long practice, has acquired as great skill in dispatching the repules as the hunter and trapper bimself. While hunting and trapping pays, Ger says that he can make far more money by kiding rattlesnakes and selling the oil. He always carries a crotched stick. When he comes upon a snake, he carefully places the croich over the reptile's neck, just back of the head. Then, if he desires to keep the snakes alive, he removes the poison by the aid of instruments made for the purpose. But he seldem keeps the snakes alive, but kills them and has a regular process for extracting the oil from their bodies. This oil is very valuable, and sells readily for $1 per ounce. It is said to have great caratice powers. Geer says the present has been an exceeding good year for snakes, and that he has killed nearly one hundred during the past three months. He claims that he can make a good living at the saake business. He is not afraid of the reptiles, and asserts that he can core their bites without fail.

POPULARITY OF THE PRINCE OF WALES .-The Prince has, as an Irishman might say, "mighty fine manners," and I suspect this is one reason why he is so universally liked. Where some of your great friends accord you the honor of a frigid bow and a very feeble imitation of a smile the Prince gives you a cheery nod and a laughing salutation. I chanced to be on the quay in Portsmouth dock yard when the ship bringing H. R. H. back to England steam d grandly alongside. The troops were presenting arms, the bands clashing out "God Save the Queen," the mayor and corporation panting and palpitating in an excess of loyalty, the generals touching their cooked hats, respectfully, the naval authorities making low salsams. The Prince, brown as a berry, radiant, laughing "all over his fac:," in the midst of all this hub bub and Koto wing, caught sight of a man-a simple journalist-who had been in his train out in India, fixed him with one of those keen glances, waved his hand with supreme cordiality and frankness, with the air of one saying, 'Well, and how are you?" and that young man (he was standing next to me) went away happy. Of course, about ten score of people took this affable recognition as being intended for them; but what of that ?- London Letter Philadelphia Times.
